

French writer Jean-Baptiste Alphonse Karr once said, “plus ça change, plus c’est la même chose.” This translated is, “The more things change, the more they remain the same.” How true this saying is at a time where the “normalcy” in our lives has been interrupted by COVID-19; however, school has begun with all its glory and excitement with a new year of learning and growing for our students to experience.

Although the mode of delivery for instruction may have changed; our commitment to our students in providing a quality education has not waived. Our administration, teachers and staff worked tirelessly over the summer months to plan for our students' arrival in September; even as their arrival was met with anticipation of the unknown and unexpected.

Our entire school community, parents, grandparents and caregivers have become familiar with Google Meet and Google Classroom. Technology has become the front and center of our lives more so than just a social media tool. But, what does remain the same is the anticipation of teaching our students new ideas and skills; watching their faces light up when they master understanding of what they just learned (even if it is in a Google Meet); and knowing that school is a place that feels familiar to our students even in our current learning environment.

Happy New School Year...our journey has just begun!!!
